

GEN. VON MOLTKE GIVES INTERVIEW

Alternative of Life or

Late Chief of Staff Is Sure of Germany's Ultimate Success.

BERLIN, Feb. 20. While the general public here remains in doubt as to the Kaiser's attitude toward peace, the Kaiser's chief of staff, General von Moltke, is not. In an interview granted to a representative of the Vossische Zeitung, the general said that Germany will ultimately win. General von Moltke is denying the charge that he had advocated that Germany should go to war in 1914. He said that the Kaiser was forced to take action because the national life of the country was at stake.

In view of the various rumors concerning General von Moltke's position, the general said that he had been in the Kaiser's confidence since the beginning of the war.

General Moltke began the conversation with a smile. "You want to make sure whether I am still alive, don't you?"

"The hostile press circulates so many fairy tales about your excellency," replied the interviewer. "It is said that the Kaiser has dismissed you from his confidence."

"That is a lie," said General Moltke. "The Kaiser has never dismissed me from his confidence. I have been in his confidence since the beginning of the war."

General Moltke was asked whether he was still in the Kaiser's confidence. He replied that he was. He said that he had been in the Kaiser's confidence since the beginning of the war.

Style Studies from America's Fore- most Authorities

Harlow patrons desire to know what is approved in style and why certain style tendencies are noted.

Our display of Spring Garments is now at a very comprehensive point, but you can't see this until tomorrow, so we are going to give you today, short excerpts from the Dry Goods Economist's Spring Fashion editorial.

For those who do not know we will say that this magazine is considered by merchants to be the leading trade-fashion publication of America. The Economist says in part:

"The trade in this country is entering upon a new experience. Paris has heretofore contributed the basic effect of all our designs. With but few exceptions manufacturers and designers who make autumn trips have spent their time at home and those who have gone over report that at present new fashion movements in Paris are impracticable."

"What then must America do?"

"First we must draw inspiration from what Paris had done prior to the war. . . . We must weigh foreign and domestic influences. . . . We must take into account what the world is thinking of."

According to the Economist we are yet under obligation to Paris for spring styles to quite a degree. The old fashion tendency, the reversal to the styles of 1830, are due to ideas that were developed before the war.

From London, too, comes a new note. The Japanese robe and the Mandarin coat with the lace frilled 1830 skirt. Still another influence is from Vienna—the new silhouette obtained not so much by the corset as the cut of the gown.

The source of the new skirt designs seems to be from the Restoration days of France, combined with the Slavic peasant styles in an unlimited variation.

This Slavic idea is continued in the new boots, which often reach to the knees, though this is considered the extreme.

It seems that the new skirts are not to be round and hoop like, but to be fuller in the sides than in front. Another point is the yoke effect in skirts, often in contrasting color, used as an easy step away from the low waist line. Another pretty feature is the apron effect in the use of flounces and tunics a pointed front panel is frequently seen, sometimes in an inverted V.

Many transparent skirts of ample fullness will be hung over drop skirts that are of much closer cut, many times with a sense of restrained fullness. Petticoats will continue to be narrow as the adaption of the wide skirt will, in itself be sufficient of a change in silhouette for the average woman.

Costumes and suits show the normal and the above normal waistline. This is not, however, an Empire effect. A slight raising of the waist line in the bodice accompanying the full, short skirt is obviously essential.

The suit jacket must be considered from the same standpoint—the relation of its length to the full skirt. The short suit coat is a natural complement of the wide skirt.

New fashions will be manifest in the collars of waists and dresses. For the opening season the military or high collar will be most in evidence. Others will suggest the bib or shelf effect. Then, too, the Dutch neck collar will come into evidence and later a return of the 1830 drop shoulder outline for the neck. This same will appear used in yoke effects, thus developing two decided points in neck finishes.

Long sleeves with close fitting armhole is the present favorite, another influence which comes directly from the Slavic and the Dutch costume. The half sleeve in strongly contrasted colors—the upper in white, the lower in black for instance, or vice versa.

The new fashion development will tend to put on a firm basis the already outlined changes in corsets, namely, a slight increase in the height of the bust, the suggestion of a curve at the side fronts, the straight hip and back and the medium length apron.

The brassiers will have a new feature additional boning, to give more decided outline to the figure.

The colors which will be the strongest claimant will be sombre and neutral tones. The black and white vogue, already well begun, bids fair to reach almost incredible. Black and white will be the smart color features of the season.

Second only to black and white combinations are the neutral shades. Finally comes the procession of blues from the staple navy on through the varying tones.

awaiting, as has been the customary practice, the decision of the prize court before making diplomatic representations.

The decision of the court is expected, however, to be made within a reasonable length of time, and if, in the opinion of the state department, there is a denial of justice to the American owners, a protest will be entered.

Conditions Improved.

The state department of late has received comparatively few complaints of detentions and seizure, and the opinion prevails among officials that the American note has had its desired effect.

As for the note which Great Britain sent on the case of the American steamer, Wilhelmina, bound for Germany with a cargo of foodstuffs, now held by the British prize courts, the state department will enter into no further correspondence on the subject.

is to me the one hero of this day. "Without him we would not be here. Without him banners would not fly nor bands play. Without him San Francisco would not be today the gayest city of the globe. Shall I tell you who he is, this key figure in the arch of our enterprise? That slender, dauntless, plodding, modest figure is the American pioneer. To me he is far more. He is the adventuresome spirit of our restless race.

Adventure Goes On. "His sons are they who have cut these continents in twain, who have slashed God's world as with a knife, who have gleefully made the rebel-licious seas to lift man's ships across the barrier mountains.

"The long journey of this might modest figure that stands beside the oxen is at an end. The waste places of the earth have been found. But adventure is not to end. Here in his house will be taught the gospel of an advancing democracy — strong, valiant, confident, conquering — upborne and typified by the independent spirit of the American pioneer."

be held in "strict accountability" for any loss of American vessels "or lives," and this warning is construed by administration officials to be sufficiently broad also to cover any injury to American citizens aboard British vessels.

Arguments in both the British and German communications charging violations of the rules of international law and warfare, it is held by American government officials, are of no concern to the United States. The breaking down of the doctrine of international law between the belligerents does not, in the view of high officials here, affect the status of those rules as between the United States and Great Britain and Germany, with whom this country is at peace.

The position of the United States is based on the right of a neutral to demand certain treatment for its ships and commerce, regardless of the respective actions of the belligerents. Further correspondence with the belligerents is opposed by many high officials, on the ground that the American government ought not to be drawn into a discussion of charges which Great Britain and Germany have made toward each other.

There is every prospect, however,
